Growing up on a family farm, he spent countless hours listening to his father's vinyl collection, which included classic folk, country, and early rock & roll records. The rural setting, combined with the storytelling tradition of the Midwest, shaped Hosey's musical sensibilities from a young age.

Hosey began playing the guitar at 12, and by the time he was 15, he was writing his own songs. He drew inspiration from legends such as Woody Guthrie, Bob Dylan, and the contemporary Americana scene. His early compositions were characterized by simple chord progressions and a focus on lyrical authenticity, themes that would later define "Back in the Day."
