While the above list is illustrative, real game nights will feature a wide variety of topics—from “What are some common ways to get a good night"s sleep?” to “Name a popular movie franchise.” The key is to remain flexible and think of common, everyday experiences that people are likely to mention.

Decoding the “Top Answers” Strategy

Each question on Family Feudcomes with a set of “top answers,” which are the most frequently selected responses by the surveyed group. The higher the point value of an answer, the more common it was among respondents. Contestants who can identify these high-value answers quickly will rack up points fast.

Here are some tactics for mastering the top answers:

- Think in categories. If the question is about food, recall the most common foods people mention. For instance, “What is a common food for breakfast?” will almost always include “eggs.”
- Use everyday experiences. Many questions revolve around daily habits—think of what most people do at home, at work, or during leisure time.
- Leverage cultural references. Pop culture questions often revolve around current movies, music, or trends. Staying up to date can give you an edge.
- Practice with mock rounds. Create your own survey questions and ask friends or family to answer. Compare answers to see which ones are most common.
- Stay calm and think fast. The show is timed. Even if you’re unsure, a quick guess can be worth points if it’s correct.

Common Question Themes and How to Approach Them

Below, we break down the most common question categories and give you a quick cheat sheet for each. Use these as a mental checklist during game nights.

Questions about daily routines—like “What do people do after work?”—often have straightforward answers. Think of the most universal actions: watch TV, take a shower, cook dinner, read, and relax.

Food questions are a staple. For “What is a common snack?” you’ll likely hear chips, cookies, popcorn, fruit, and nuts. For drinks, think of coffee, tea, soda, water, and juice.

These questions tap into shared cultural knowledge. For “What is a popular TV show?” you might guess Friends, Game of Thrones, The Simpsons, Grey"s Anatomy, and The Office. For movies, think of blockbusters like Avengers, Titanic, Star Wars, Jurassic Park, and Harry Potter.

When asked “What do people do when they’re happy?” the top responses usually involve smiling, laughing, hugging, dancing, and celebrating. For negative emotions, think of crying, yelling, avoiding, sulking, and complaining.
